Nature park for Southern Islands

Turning it into an eco-tourism spot will be tourism board's priority while resort development takes a backseat

Before Singaporeans dream of developing a national park on the Southern Islands, which could become a national park in the next few years, eco-tourism development will go hand in hand. The Southern Islands have a number of attractions, including the Southern Islands National Park, which includes Lazarus Island, St John's Island, and St John's Island. They include beaches, coral reefs, mangrove forests, and wildlife reserves. The park is expected to be completed by 2025.

The development of the park is expected to be completed by 2025. Most of the development will be carried out on St John's Island.

MORE LAND

Reclamation work on the Southern Islands started early last year, and involves clearing and reclaiming land on St John's Island and St John's Island. It is expected to be completed by 2025.

Nature is a priority for this project, and it aims to preserve the unique flora and fauna of the Southern Islands. The development will involve the creation of new areas for tourism and nature reserves.

The development of the park is expected to be completed by 2025. Most of the development will be carried out on St John's Island.
